God Speaks through Worship

John 4:19-24

We live in a time when there is much diversity of opinion about what constitutes Biblical worship. The problem is that it is difficult for some to separate tradition from truth. We focus on forms and not facts. We confuse message and methodology. It appears the methodology has become the message in many places. One fact that is certain is that men by nature are worshippers. Our real need is to get in the presence of God where we can listen to Him speak. Let's look at ...

1. Traditions in Worship.

- a. Determined by Culture .
- b. Determined by Consumerism .
- c. Determined by Color .

2. Truth in Worship.

- a. The importance of Scripture .
- b. The importance of our Spirit .
- c. The importance of the Sovereign .

3. Transformation in Worship.

- a. It convicts us.
- b. It changes us.
- c. It challenges us.

Are You Worshipping in Spirit and in Truth?

Who Is God, Anyway?

When listening to folks talk about God, it turns out we're all over the map. In the West, we still live in a hangover from our Christianized past. There was a time when you could say "God," and people would immediately think of the God we read about in the Scriptures and see in Jesus Christ. Most people would even come to the same basic conclusions about this God. That time has long since gone the way of the earth.

Today, when I say "God," you might think any number of things, depending on your country of birth, language, religion, church experience, background — and, of course, whether or not you have cable. All of this brings us to the question: Who is God?

In his book, God Has a Name by John Mark Comer, he states that he's not writing his book to prove that God exists. He says, "If you're an atheist, welcome to the table. We're glad you're here. Just know that I won't go into a litany of reasons that I'm right and you're wrong. There are a lot of people way smarter than me — the kind with extra letters after their name — who've already had a crack at that.

"I can only speak out of my own life, and, for me, God's existence was never the question. I've been down the road of doubt, had a crisis of faith — a few actually — thought long and hard about Jesus, and had a list of questions about the Bible stretching to Florida and back (I live in Portland — it's a long trek). But for me, the question was never whether God exists. The way I'm wired that was axiomatic and self-evident."

Comer goes on to raise some far more interesting questions like, "What in the world is God like?" He asks, "Is God a he? Or a she? Is God a they? Or an it? Is the tree in my front yard full of the divine? Am I? Is God even a person? Or is he/she/they/it/the tree/maybe-even-me more of an energy force or a state of mind?

"Or is God just a myth? A carryover from a world that all smart, thinking people have moved on from? Now that we have science and technology, 'we know better.' Let's assume for now that there is some kind of an invisible-but-real being who made everything, and for now let's call this being 'God.' If so, what is this God like?

"Is He Kind, or cruel? Close by and involved in my life, or far-off and aloof? Strict and uptight like a fundamentalist preacher, or free and easygoing like a good, educated progressive? Does he vote Democratic? Or is he a Republican? Maybe Green Party?

"Or how about this one: Is God even good for the world anymore? Fewer and fewer people answer yes. What if God and religion are just an endless source of violence and hatred and bigotry and hypocrisy and really bad music? Who is this "God" we love, hate, worship, blaspheme, trust, fear, believe in, doubt, cuss in the name of, bow to, make jokes about, and most of the time just ignore? I would argue that how you answer this question will define you."

Well, before you declare me a heretic for even sharing such thoughts, hear me out. The twentieth-century writer A. W. Tozer made a stunning claim: "What comes into our minds when we think about God is the most important thing about us." Really? Absolutely. Here's a truth that cuts across the whole of the universe: We become like what we worship. Put another way, what you think about God will shape your destiny in life.

So what/who are you worshipping? Is there only one Lord of your life? Are you able to "Seek first the Kingdom of God" and trust Him to provide for all your needs? Won't you walk in His ways daily?

God Bless You!

Bro. Allan
